

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

FROM the lapse of time between the breaking up of the Old and the re-forming of the New Corps, viz. thirty-seven years, and from the numerous impediments to compiling met with in India, such as the almost total absence of any reference, and the difficulty of obtaining replies to correspondence from England, the Compiler regrets—not a cheery announcement in a Preface—that he is at present unable to produce more perfect annals. He is induced to bring them out as they now appear at the solicitations of two gallant officers of the Old Corps who were present with THE REGIMENT during the Occupation of Paris, and the only survivors of those then serving. For the sole benefit of THE REGIMENT—hoping they may prove as such—are these compilations produced; and that the present Regiment may be incited by the perusal of them to follow in the footsteps of the Old Corps, whose well-earned honours it bears, is the ardent hope of its comrade and well-wisher, the Compiler.

Should these pages be perused by any who may be able to rectify, or assist in adding to them authentically even a few words, they will be most gladly received, and all such alterations and additions acknowledged and prefixed from time to time.*

The following are the names of those through whose kindness most material aid has been received, and for which the Compiler again returns his warmest thanks:—

Sir C. Style, late Cornet EIGHTEENTH Hussars.

Lieut.-Colonel Wickham Freeman, late Lieutenant EIGHTEENTH Hussars.

* The fact of all extracts regarding THE REGIMENT herein being recorded intact, will account for most movements and engagements being described as "in brigade."

To Colonel Wickham Freeman have the thanks of THE REGIMENT once been given; for he, with a laudable generosity worthy of imitation, presented back to THE REGIMENT his share of the Regimental Plate, which he, as well as others, obtained on the breaking up of the Corps in 1821.

The following is the list of works referred to in this compilation :—

The late Colonel James Hughes, MSS., late EIGHTEENTH Hussars.

Napier's 'Peninsular War.'

'Campaigns of the British Army in Spain under Sir John Moore.'

'The Wellington Dispatches.'

'The Life of Wellington,' by Brialmont and Gleig.

HISTORICAL RECORDS
THE EIGHTEENTH HUSSARS.

THIS REGIMENT was raised in Ireland by Lieut.- 1759.
Colonel Charles, the sixth Earl and first Marquis of Drogheda, and numbered the Nineteenth Light Dragoons, for some time called "Drogheda's Light Horse."

THE REGIMENT was numbered the EIGHTEENTH 1763.
Light Dragoons on the disbandment of the then Seventeenth Light Dragoons.

The Hon. Arthur Wesley (afterwards Field- 1792.
Marshal the Duke of Wellington) exchanged 31 Oct.
into THE REGIMENT as a Lieutenant from the Fifty-eighth Foot, remaining until he obtained his majority in the Thirty-third Regiment; 1793.
having been a Member of the Irish House of 30 April.
Commons for the family borough of Trim, and 1795. an Aide-de-Camp to the Lord Lieutenant, Lord Camden, since 1791.

Aug. Four troops proceeded from Ireland to England.

21 Sept. THE REGIMENT embarked from Southampton for Jamaica. On board the transport 'Richard,' were embarked 9 officers and 212 serjeants, trumpeters, rank and file. And on board the 'Barbat,' man-of-war, and the 'Friendship,' were embarked 15 officers, 12 serjeants, 11 corporals, 4 trumpeters, and 183 rank and file. The strength of THE REGIMENT at this time was 463 serjeants, trumpeters, rank and file.

1796. Proceeded to St. Domingo, and served at that
Feb. station until its re-embarkation for England.

1797. Lieut.-Colonel the Honourable Charles William
Oct. Vane Stewart, G.C.B., appointed to the Lieu-1798. tenant-Colonelcy of THE REGIMENT, six days after the disbandment of his former regiment, of which he was the Lieut.-Colonel, viz. the Fifth Dragoons. At the period of his obtaining the Lieutenant-Colonelcy of THE REGIMENT, it was a skeleton, but his activity and success in completing and rendering efficient the corps were most conspicuous.

"Orders from H.R.H. the COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF. 15 July.

"HORSE GUARDS.

"The troops now encamped near Southampton are immediately to move to the neighbourhood of Canterbury. They consist of two brigades of Guards and two brigades of the Line, with one squadron of the EIGHTEENTH Light Dragoons. The Light Dragoons will have a separate route on the left of the whole, and be quartered on their march; they will be directed o Canterbury Barracks."

"HEAD-QUARTERS, BARHAM COURT.

"G.O. The Commanding Officer of the EIGHTEENTH Light Dragoons will, in like manner, send an embarkation return as soon as he receives orders to march from Canterbury."

The detachment, consisting of two squadrons—strength: 1 lieut.-colonel, 2 captains, 4 lieutenants, 3 cornets, 6 staff, 12 serjeants, 4 trumpeters, and 183 rank and file—embarked 12 Aug.
at Deal for Holland, accompanied by Lieut.-Colonel Stewart, and these were attached to the 1799. left column, under the command of Lieut.-General Sir Ralph Abercromby.

Engagement
in Holland.
17 Sept. Joined in the general attack upon the whole of the enemy's positions, and here Lieut.-Colonel Stewart was highly distinguished. He was 10 Oct. wounded in the head at the outposts near Schagenbrug by a musket-ball. The ball struck the glass he was looking through, which it broke, and was stopped by the brass tubes of the glass, or it would have proved fatal.

Nov. The detachment returned with the expedition to England.

1804. THE REGIMENT, consisting of ten troops, em-
8 April. barked at Liverpool.

12 April. Landed at Dublin.

1807. Embarked at Dublin.
1 July.

12 July. Arrived at Liverpool.

25 Dec. Permission received to be clothed as Hussars—the pelisse with grey fur; jackets, light blue, silver lace; busby-bags, blue, and white plumes springing out of a smaller red one.

1808. Eight troops (strength 672 men,) embarked at 26 July. Northfleet for Lisbon, under the command of Brigadier-General C. Stewart, to join Sir John Moore's army.

1 Sept. Landed at Lisbon, and with the rest of the cavalry were under the command of Lieut.- 1808.

General Lord Paget.

Marched from Lisbon.

18 Oct.

General Stewart's horsemen surprised fifty 12 Dec.
infantry and thirty dragoons at the village of Rueda on this night, the escort of a valuable convoy of cotton. The affair was trifling, but managed by General Stewart with much address, and was executed with spirit by officers and men; the escort was a detachment from Valladolid, where General Franceschi commanded with three or four hundred cavalry.

General Stewart let few days pass without taking or killing different parties of the French, generally superior in force to those which attacked them.

Extract from a Narrative of the Peninsular War, by Lieut.-General C. W. VANE, Marquis of Londonderry, G.C.B., &c., &c.

"It was the good fortune of a squadron of the EIGHTEENTH Hussars to come at this time into contact with the enemy. There is a small town called Rueda, situated about half-way between Nava and Tordesillas, in which we had been given to understand that detachments of the enemy's cavalry, with some infantry, were quartered. Having caused it to be reconnoitred, and 1808. finding that the French seemed quite ignorant of our proximity, I determined to surprise them if possible, at all events to bring them to action. With this intention a squadron proceeded against them on the night of the 12th, and happily made good our entrance unobserved; we soon threw them into confusion, the greater number were sabred on the spot, many were taken, and only a few escaped."

18 Dec. A successful skirmish by THE REGIMENT under Major Otway, capturing Colonel Antignac, and bringing off more prisoners than his party of Hussars consisted of; this took place near Valladolid.

Skirmish near Valladolid.

24 & 25 Dec. Employed skirmishing, under Colonel Otway, at Sahagun, covering Sir John Moore's retrograde movement.

Skirmishes at Sahagun.

26 Dec. The English cavalry had been now engaged more or less for twelve successive days, with such fortune and bravery, that above 500 prisoners had already fallen into their hands, and, their leaders being excellent, their confidence was unbounded.

29 Dec. The pickets of THE REGIMENT, under Lieut.-Colonel Otway, retired before the French advance at Benavente; but were joined by a part of the Third German Hussars, and charged the leading French squadrons with some effect.

Brigadier-General Stewart then took the com- 1808.
mand, and the ground was obstinately disputed,
yet the enemy advanced. During the charge before-mentioned, General Stewart had his sword struck out of his hand by a musket-ball; but it was immediately replaced by that of Lieut.-
Colonel Otway, with which he continued the contest. The pickets perceiving the Tenth Hussars coming up, with a loud cheer dashed forward, and obliged the enemy to retire to the opposite side of the river Esla. This attack was conducted with so much gallantry, that the Imperial guards were overthrown, General Le Febvre made prisoner, together with several officers and 130 men, and many killed, wounded, and drowned besides. This action (it has been asserted) took place within view of Napoleon himself, who from the heights opposite directed General Le Febvre to "cross the Esla, and bring those English cavalry prisoners." Nothing could exceed the coolness and gallantry displayed by the British cavalry on this occasion.

Affair at Palentia.

THE REGIMENT had signalized itself in several former skirmishes; they were successful in six different attacks. Captain Jones, when at Palentia, had even ventured to charge 100 French dragoons with only 30 British; 14 of the enemy were killed, and 6 taken prisoners.

In the retreat to Corunna, formed a part of the rear guard; and the manner in which the retreat of Sir John Moore was protected throughout by the Hussar brigade, obtained much approbation. On arrival at Corunna, THE REGIMENT was immediately embarked, having first received orders to shoot all their horses, for the position taken up by the British was not one that rendered the services of cavalry available.

"MY DEAR STEWART,

"I received your letter of the 9th December, two days ago, and I take the earliest opportunity of replying to it. I found the organization of our cavalry in two divisions, to be very disadvantageous in the last campaign, and I propose to alter it if I can; and to have but one corps of cavalry under Sir Stapleton, from which detachments should be made to perform the cavalry duty with the detached corps of the army. Under these circumstances, although it might be more agreeable to you to take a gallop with the Hussars, I think you had better return to your office.* I have come here to try 'to organize the poles,' which appears to be a work something of the same kind with that "I propose that the whole of the cavalry of the army should be in one division under your command, and that the cavalry duty of any detachments that should be made from the main body shall be done by detachments of brigades or other subdivisions from that division. This will simplify the concern very materially. . . .

1813. A French picket, consisting of an officer and thirty men, were surprised in the village of Villa Perdrices by the Hussars. A part of THE REGIMENT, when crossing, lost some men and horses, as the river had greatly risen during the night. Lieut.-Col. Murray received a very severe injury on this occasion, and was obliged to return to England, the command devolving upon Major Hughes, who continued to hold it until the close of hostilities in 1814.

- 1 June. The French position being now turned, they fell back, and the brigade this day entered Zamora, the French evacuating it, after destroying the bridge. They retired upon Toro; destroyed the bridge there also, and again fell back. But their rear-guard was overtaken near the village of Morales by the Hussar brigade consisting of THE REGIMENT and the Tenth, supported by the Fifteenth Hussars, the whole under the command of Colonel, afterwards Sir Colquhon Grant. The enemy's horsemen immediately passed a bridge and swamp, under a cannonade, and then facing about in two lines, gave battle; whereupon Major Robarts, with the Tenth Hussars, flanked by a squadron of

THE REGIMENT, under Major Hughes—the rest 1813. of THE REGIMENT being in reserve,—broke both the lines at one charge, pursued for two miles, and made two officers, 200 men, and a number of horses prisoners. This secured the junction of the two wings, Hill's and Graham's; for the Douro was fordable. Colonel Grant was wounded in this engagement.

The Allied Armies were all now in motion, 2 June. and Joseph Buonaparte being unable to stem the tide of war which now flowed against him, ordered his columns to fall back behind the river Pisuerga, designing to give battle there. The Allied Army continued to press forward, and the EIGHTEENTH, Tenth, and Fifteenth Hussars were generally in front.

"The English Hussars being in the advance guard, fell in between Toro and Morales with a considerable body of the enemy's cavalry, which was immediately attacked by the Tenth, supported by the EIGHTEENTH and Fifteenth Hussars. The enemy were overthrown and pursued for many miles, and 210 prisoners with many horses, and two officers fell into our hands."

Advanced at daybreak to the Zadora with the Heavy Cavalry, and being preceded by Picton and Barnard's riflemen, with the remainder of Kempt's brigade, crossed the river by the bridge of Tres Puentes. After a severe contest of several hours' duration, the French were forced back; the Hussar brigade acting in support of the third division, carried the hill in front of Arinez, and subsequently the village of Arinez and the town, Vittoria, under the personal direction of the General-in-Chief. Here the ground was most unfavourable for the movement of the Hussars. The loss in THE REGIMENT on the occasion was somewhat severe, counting amongst others two Captains, viz. Captain William Turing and Captain Robert Carew. A part of THE REGIMENT captured the equipages of King Joseph, and were close to him when he fled from the field.

Major Hughes commanding THE REGIMENT, reinforced with some Spanish Caçadores, having crossed the bridge Mendionde, commenced a skirmish, but Morillo retreated without notice during the action, the Caçadores fled in a shameful manner, and THE REGIMENT escaped with difficulty, having had one Captain killed, and two others, a Lieutenant and Major Hughes himself, badly wounded. This disaster was falsely reported at the time as the result of the Hussars' bad conduct, and they had in like manner been previously—from the same source—misrepresented at Head Quarters as more licentious than others at Vittoria; whereas they had fought as well, and plundered less than many who were praised for orderly demeanour.

12 Mar. Entered Bordeaux, Beresford commanding; soon afterwards were recalled, together with the Fourth division.

17 Mar. This evening, Vivian's brigade marched up the valley of the Adour towards Plaisance.

18 Mar. Vivian's brigade, together with the Light and Fourth divisions forming the left wing (the whole army being in movement) marched upon Plaisance, and drove the French cavalry to Rabastens.

20 Mar. Vivian's cavalry followed the army from Beaumarchez and La Deveze, sending detachments to the side of Trie, to watch Pierre Soult.

Attacked (together with the Light division) Harrispe's centre, which occupied the heights of Orliex.

In masking the movements of the infantry about Portet, by the operations of the cavalry, a squadron of THE REGIMENT, under Major Hughes, being inconsiderately pushed by Colonel Vivian across the bridge of St. Martyn-de-la-Touch, suddenly came upon a whole regiment of French cavalry, and the rashness of the act, as often happens in war, proved the safety of THE REGIMENT, for the enemy thinking a strong support must be at hand, discharged their carbines and retreated at a canter. Major Hughes followed, the speed of both sides increased, and, as the nature of the road did not admit of any egress to the sides, this great body of French horsemen was pushed headlong by a few men under the batteries of St. Cyprien.

It was defended by Veal's Dragoons; and after some skirmishing, THE REGIMENT was suddenly menaced by a regiment in front of the bridge, the opposite bank of the river being lined with dismounted carbineers. The two parties stood facing each other hesitatingly until the approach of some British infantry, when both sides sounded a charge at the same moment; but the English horses were so quick that the French were in an instant jammed on the bridge and their front ranks sabred, and the rear went off in disorder, leaving many killed and wounded and 100 prisoners behind. They were pursued behind the village of Croix d'Orade, yet rallied beyond it on the rest of their brigade, and advanced again. THE REGIMENT then recrossed the bridge, which was now defended by the British infantry, whose fire stopped the French cavalry. In this action Captain Croker received a severe sabre-wound in the face. The credit of this brilliant action, which secured the communication of the separated columns, was incorrectly

Extract from the DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S Letter to EARL BATHURST, dated Toulouse, the 12th April, 1814.

"We immediately moved forwards to the neighbourhood of the town,* and the EIGHTEENTH Hussars, under the immediate command of Colonel Vivian, had an opportunity of making a most gallant attack upon a superior body of the enemy's cavalry, which they drove through the village of Croix d'Orade, and took about 100 prisoners, and gave us the possession of an important bridge over the river Ers, by which it was necessary to pass in order to attack the enemy's position. Colonel Vivian was unfortunately wounded upon this occasion, and I am afraid that I shall lose the benefit of his assistance for some time."

Vivian's Hussars, now under Arentschild. 10 April.

Marched from Croix d'Orade at the head of Beresford's column, passing behind the Pugade through the village of Montblanc, and entered the marshy ground between the Ers river and Mont Rare. Vivian's cavalry drove Bertou's

However, THE REGIMENT gained the bridge of Montaudran, higher up, though it was barricaded, and defended by a detachment of cavalry sent there by Bertou. After forcing the bridge of Montaudran, on the Ers, THE REGIMENT, together with the German Hussars, came round the south end of Mont Rare, where, in conjunction with the skirmishers of the Fourth division, they menaced the bridge of the Demoiselles, from whence, and from the works of Cambon and Sacarin, the enemy's guns played incessantly.

11 April. Sent, with the rest of the Light Cavalry up the canal, to interrupt the communication with Suchet, and to menace Soult's retreat by the road leading to Carcassonne.

12 April. Engaged on the side of Montlaur, and defeated the French with a loss of twenty-five men, cutting off a like number of Gens-d'Armes on the side of Revel.

Soult now retreated, and the army entered Toulouse in triumph. The abdication of Napoleon at Paris, and the restoration of the Bourbon dynasty to the throne of France, put an end to the war.

The report of the advance of the French on 15 June.

1815. this day was made to the Duke of Wellington, principally by the First K.G.H., at 5 P.M., who were stationed as outposts in the vicinity of Mons and Tournai.
- 16 June. Wellington's army came up at half-past two in the day. THE REGIMENT was so widely scattered for the sake of quarters and forage, that they could not get up in time to take part in the action fought this day at Quatre Bras.
- 17 June. Posted on the left of Quatre Bras in brigade, under Sir Hussey Vivian. Two strong pickets were thrown out, that from THE REGIMENT, commanded by Captain Croker, on the Namur road, with which Colonel Murray remained in person; the other, of the Tenth Hussars, under Major the Hon. F. Howard. The pickets of both regiments engaged on the advance of the French cuirassiers of Milhaud's corps and the Lancers who formed part of Subervie's Light Cavalry division. General Vivian now took up a new alignment, throwing back his left so as to present a front to the enemy's advance. In the retrograde movement of the cavalry now ordered, General Vivian's with Vandeleur's brigade constituted the left column, and effected its retreat by a bridge over the Genappe at Thuy, still lower down the stream than that by which Alten's infantry division had crossed. Scarcely had these dispositions been arranged, when the pickets of THE REGIMENT came in at a good round trot, followed by two or three squadrons of French cavalry, who were checked by General Vivian's artillery. The French artillery now came up and opened fire. Lord Uxbridge ordered General Vivian to retire, the French guns opening fire on them, especially on THE REGIMENT, all the time. General Vivian was led to expect Vandeleur's brigade to support him now, but on coming up to him, he (Vandeleur) went about; General Vivian seeing this, halted and fronted THE REGIMENT, and ordered the charge of the French as soon as they approached within favourable reach. The weather during the morning had become oppressively hot, it was now a dead calm, not a leaf was stirring, and the atmosphere was close to an intolerable degree, while a dark, heavy, dense cloud impended the combatants. THE REGIMENT was fully prepared, and waited but the command to charge, when the brigade guns on the right commenced firing, for the purpose of previously disturbing and breaking the order of the enemy's 17 June. rebound through the still atmosphere, and communicate as an electric spark with the heavily charged mass above. A most awfully loud thunder-clap burst forth, immediately succeeded by a rain which has never probably been exceeded in violence even within the Tropics. In a few minutes the ground became perfectly saturated, so much so, that it was quite impracticable for any rapid movement of the cavalry.

The First German Hussars now replaced THE REGIMENT as rear-guard; arriving at Genappe, an interruption arose through Vandeleur's cavalry not having effected their passage across the little bridge of Thuy, so THE REGIMENT was put about with a view to assist the King's German Hussars. On the bridge being clear, THE REGIMENT resumed its progress and passed over.

The Tenth Hussars dismounted, skirmishing on the opposite side defending the passage, THE REGIMENT drawn up in line. The good countenance shown by General Vivian's brigade, and the running wet state of the ground, completely checked the pursuit of the enemy's cavalry, which now turned towards the high road.

In this retreat from Quatre Bras to Waterloo, to keep up the communication with the Prussian army, THE REGIMENT had one man killed and one wounded. 1815.

Extract from a Letter from the DUKE OF WELLINGTON relating to Waterloo.

“PARIS, 17th August, 1815.

“The battle began, I believe, at eleven.”

Stationed in brigade on the extreme left of the First or main line, both to protect that flank and to keep up correspondence with the Prussians; and being beyond those charges of French:

1815.
18 June. cavalry and infantry in which Generals Picton and Ponsonby fell, did not come into action until nearly the close of the day. The Tenth Hussars were in line with THE REGIMENT, in rear of the Wavre road, and withdrawn a little from the crest of the ridge, the right of the Tenth Hussars resting on a lane, which leading up from Smohain, crossing over the position, and descending along the reverse slope, proceeded in the direction of Verd-Cocou. The First K.G.H. in reserve in line.

On Ponsonby's brigade charging, General Vivian ordered THE REGIMENT and the Tenth Hussars to move through the hollow way to their right.

The First K.G.H. to keep a look-out on the left; THE REGIMENT and the Tenth Hussars' new position was on the right of the lane leading to Verd-Cocou.

The Brunswickers in the centre were withheld on their wavering by the Duke of Wellington, and on their rallying and reforming, THE REGIMENT came up in brigade and formed line with the Tenth Hussars (the K.G.H. in rear) in rear of these troops, relieving the exhausted remains of the Scots Greys and Third Hussars (K.G.L.).

The brigade had previously, in consequence of a mistake in transmission of orders, been halted on the left of the high road about midway between the front line and the farm of Mont St. Jean, whence however it was speedily brought forward and posted as above by Lord Uxbridge.

18 June.

The air of ruin and destruction that met their view in rear of the centre of the line was calculated to inspire them with thoughts by no means akin to anticipations of victory, and made many think that they had been brought from the left to cover a contemplated retreat; yet no despondency was perceptible, and the feeling of reliance on the oft-proved skill of the Chief cherished the hope that by persevering a little longer, their repeated heroic exertions would yet be crowned with success. This feeling was aptly expressed by Colonel Sir Felton Harvey, of the Duke's Staff, who, having ridden to THE REGIMENT to change his wounded charger, exclaimed as he was about to mount a troop-horse, "The Duke of Wellington has won the battle if we could but get the d—— d—— to advance."

THE REGIMENT now followed in brigade in support of the Brunswickers and Nassauers, and by its proximity to these troops,—by whom a fire

1815. (most close and unremitting) was maintained,—
18 June. was placed in a trying situation for cavalry, and suffered much in consequence.

As soon as the infantry had rallied and got into line in their former position, General Vivian withdrew his brigade under the crest of the ridge, 30 yards off, to place his men out of fire.

On the Duke of Wellington seeing the success of the charge of Adam's brigade, he ordered fresh cavalry to check the probable advance of the enemy, and to attack the French reserves in front of La Belle Alliance. Lieut.-Colonel Lord Greenock, A.Q.M.G. of the cavalry, was sent to General Vivian, with orders for him to move his brigade to its right, from its position in rear of Alten's division, so as to get clear of the infantry, and then to advance directly to the front by the right of Maitland's brigade of Guards. A trot now sounded, and the brigade advanced against the cavalry reserves near La Belle Alliance by half-squadrons to the right, THE REGIMENT following the Tenth Hussars, the First King's German Hussars in rear. Proceeding a short distance in rear of the infantry, and parallel to the crest of the position, it approached Maitland's brigade, and here the leading half-squadron was ordered to wheel to the left through Napier's battery, and to lead perpendicularly to the front. On this occasion the officer commanding the leading half-squadron, not correctly catching the word of command, in consequence probably of the noise created by the fire from Napier's battery, as also from the shouts from Adam's brigade, which was following up its triumph, wheeled to the right instead of to the left. This was rectified by General Vivian in person galloping to the flank of the second half-squadron, and with emphasis and a good hearty d——, called out that it was towards and not from the enemy they were to wheel. He took the flank officer's place and led the column down the hill in the direction he wished to move, and the column thus advanced across the ridge in left front of Vandeleur's Light Cavalry brigade; it was saluted by the latter with cheers of encouragement, and in a similar manner by Maitland's brigade as it passed their flank. As soon as the smoke allowed General Vivian to see the disposition of the enemy's troops in his front, he formed line with THE REGIMENT and the Tenth Hussars, with the First K.G.H. in support. General Vivian, after seeing an attack by the Tenth 1815.

1815. Hussars he had ordered, was retiring to THE 18 June. REGIMENT when he was attacked by a cuirassier. His right hand was in a sling in consequence of the wound received at Croix d'Orade. Taking the reins in his right hand, which was barely capable of holding them, he contrived to give the cuirassier a thrust in the neck with the left. At this moment his German orderly joined, who cut the man down.

Lord Uxbridge, when on his way to join THE REGIMENT at this period, was shot in the right leg, and so was carried back, and amputation performed afterwards. After the gallant charge made by the Tenth Hussars upon the French cavalry posted in its right front, they halted and rallied. General Vivian then, as above stated, galloped to THE REGIMENT, which he found well formed in line and in perfect order. In its front stood the two squares of the Grenadiers of the Old Guard; on its left front, and much nearer to it, were posted artillery and cavalry in advance of the proper right of the squares. This cavalry consisted principally of Cuirassiers, the wrecks of entire brigades; nearer to and partly in rear of the squares stood the Chasseurs and Grenadiers-à-cheval of the Imperial Guards, greatly diminished in numbers. It was immediately evident to General Vivian that the attack must in the first instance be directed against the advanced cavalry and artillery, and having put the line in motion, he placed himself in front of the centre, beside Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. H. Murray commanding, for the purpose of putting THE REGIMENT into the required direction; this having been effected, he ordered the charge, when THE REGIMENT dashed forward with the greatest impetuosity, and at the same time with as much steadiness and regularity as if they had been at field-day exercise on Hounslow Heath. Thus the direction of the charge by THE REGIMENT diverged as much to the left, as that by the Tenth had inclined to the right. Just as the charge commenced, some French artillery coming from their right, and slanting towards the right of THE REGIMENT, made a bold push to cross the front of the latter at a gallop, but the attempt failed, and the men of THE REGIMENT were instantly among them, cutting down the artillerymen and the drivers, and securing the guns. In the next moment they fell upon the advanced cavalry, which they completely dispersed; and then bringing 18 June. cavalry and guns that stood more to their right front and near to the right square, which was now retiring: this cavalry appeared at first determined upon making a stand, and an officer in its front dashed forward and fired at Colonel Murray, but in another moment THE REGIMENT was fiercely and dexterously plying their swords among them; they were forced to give way, and a general rout ensued, the artillerymen were driven from their guns, and the whole fled in disorder. The charge then ceased to be compact, for the assailants and the flying were intermingled pell-mell, all riding as fast as the confusion of the melée would permit, a part of them along the high road, but the principal portion on the aligned right of the latter; the whole, however, passing by La Belle Alliance, and having the two squares of the Guards on their right. This attack on the French reserves decided the day.

General Vivian, satisfied with the complete success of the charge, ordered THE REGIMENT to halt and reform; during the charge, a party of THE REGIMENT (not more than from thirty to thirty-five men) continuing the charge described above close along the right of La Belle Alliance and Trimotin, and crossing the narrow road near its junction with the Charleroi road, dashed down the hollow, and ascending the height, charged about half-a-battalion of the French Guard that had rallied and formed square in most gallant style; but, as might have been expected, was checked and turned by the latter.

18 June.

Lord Robert Manners and Captain Taylor, of the Tenth Hussars, had rallied a party with a view to support THE REGIMENT, should these be charged in their turn, which, however, did not occur. By this time THE REGIMENT and the Tenth had been thrown so much into disorder by their charges, that it became necessary to check their further advance, in order to gain time for collecting and re-forming their ranks; this, owing to their having become intermingled with the fugitives, was attended with considerable difficulty.

The French army was now completely overthrown, and fled in one vast indistinguishable mass along the road and over the fields, while the allied squadrons poured on their shattered flanks and rear, and the setting sun cast a fiery gleam over this unparalleled scene. The French

1815. historians invariably attribute the final déroute
18 June. of their army to the charges made by the British Light Cavalry launched against it immediately after the attack by the Imperial Guard.

THE REGIMENT and the Tenth, while endeavouring to re-form between La Belle Alliance and Rossomme, found themselves in the midst of an immense crowd, composed partly of defeated soldiers of the Imperial Guard, who could but ill conceal their mortification, and who seized every opportunity that offered to gratify their hatred and revenge. Colonel Murray was very nearly bayoneted by one of them, and his orderly was compelled to cut down five or six in rapid succession for the security of his master. One of the Prussian advanced regiments of cavalry, suddenly entering the high road between La Belle Alliance and Rossomme, came into partial collision with THE REGIMENT, who, not anticipating the presence of any other foreign troops in that vicinity than those of the French army, commenced an attack upon them. Cuts were exchanged, and some few lives lost before the error was corrected.

This Brigade was the first (though quickly followed by Vandeleur's) in completing the final defeat of the French army. Our Heavy Cavalry had been nearly used-up in their gallant encounters in the early part of the day, and took no part in these charges, except at the time of the general advance of the whole line. The Hussars first charged Cuirassiers, and then Lancers. THE REGIMENT'S casualties in the battle were:— 1815.

18 June.

Captain Hesse and Lieutenant and Adjutant H. Dupe-rier, wounded.

Rank and file: killed, 13; wounded, 72; missing, 17: Total, 104,—more than one-fourth of the whole.

This anecdote of the day may be worth relating:—

On first encountering the Cuirassiers, Serjeant Taylor of THE REGIMENT made a cut at the head of one of them, which had no other effect on the Frenchman than to induce him to cry out in derision, "Ha, ha!" and to return a severe blow at the serjeant, which was admirably parried. Taylor then thrust his sabre into the mouth of the Cuirassier, who instantly fell, and the conqueror cried "Ha, ha!" in his turn, which much increased the ardour of his comrades.

General Vivian, inclining to his right, led his Hussars much farther in advance of the army, on the French side of the observatory that stood in the wood of Callois, and bivouacked close to the hamlet of Hilaincourt.

Other reasons having been vaguely mooted regarding the reduction of THE REGIMENT, it may be as well to quote a letter, from an officer who was present with THE REGIMENT at the time, to the compiler :—

“The report of THE REGIMENT having been reduced through any feeling in favour of Queen Caroline is a

1821. most gross slander, and wholly untrue. I know there 10 Sept. was such a stupid report going about, and Lockhart mentions it in his 'Life of Scott.' Colonel Murray wrote to him to desire he would immediately erase it."

When THE REGIMENT left Canterbury for active service in the Netherlands in 1815, a great portion of their plate was left in store in Canterbury; this was all stolen. The same correspondent to the compiler says of it:—

"The plate of the EIGHTEENTH that was left in store in Canterbury, when THE REGIMENT went on active service, will never be heard of again; I fear that there was some great roguery respecting it. When I joined, I remember the old officers discussing it often."

Speaking of the men of THE REGIMENT, the same officer says:—

"The men were tall for Hussars, 5 feet 8 inches or 5 feet 9 inches."

By the same officer:—

"We had a silver trumpet or trumpets, purchased by the sale of the French dragoon horses taken by the EIGHTEENTH after the last charge at Waterloo, and they were presented to Sir H. Vivian, and his son Lord Vivian has them; and if he had the same regard for the EIGHTEENTH that I have, he would present them to THE REGIMENT again."

REGIMENT OF LIGHT DRAGOONS;—
HUSSARS.

COLONELS.

CHARLES, MARQUIS OF DROGHEDA.

LORD DROGHEDA entered the service, as Cornet in the Twelfth Dragoons, the 1st May, 1744; was gazetted as Colonel of the EIGHTEENTH Hussars the 3rd August, 1762; and died on the 22nd of December, 1821; having been Colonel of THE REGIMENT for sixty-two years.

EDWARD BYAM,

Appointed 16th November, 1858.

LIEUT.-GENERAL BYAM served the campaigns of 1812, '13, '14, and '15, including the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Orthes, and Waterloo, besides minor affairs. Severely wounded by a grape-shot while carrying the regimental colour of the Thirty-eighth at Salamanca, and slightly wounded at Waterloo. He has received the War Medal with three Clasps. Major-General Byam's first commission was an ensigncy in the Thirty-eighth, with which regiment he served two campaigns: all his other commissions and the rest of his service were in the Fifteenth Hussars.

SIR CHARLES O'DONNELL,

Appointed 10th September, 1864.

SIR CHARLES O'DONNELL was present with the Russian troops in the campaign of 1828 on the Danube against the Turks; and in 1849 with the German troops in Schleswig-Holstein and Jutland, especially at Duppel and the battle of Fredericia.

APPENDIX.

THE compiler returns his warmest thanks to Lady Murray for her kindness in enabling him to have the portrait of her, gallant husband, who was so long connected with THE REGIMENT, reproduced in these Records, and for the following interesting memoranda from Colonel Murray's MSS., which, owing to their not having been received until the Records were ready for publication, he was obliged to place in an Appendix.

ADDITIONAL MEMORANDA.

After the words "hostilities in 1814," page 24.

Colonel Murray's accident at the crossing of the Esla nearly cost him his life. On coming out of the river his horse lost his footing on some rocks and fell back into deep water, having cut his rider's knee to the bone. Notwithstanding the wound, Col. Murray continued to do duty, joining in pursuit of the enemy's picquet that took place immediately after his accident; and being present at the Battle of Morales two days after, inflammation then set in in the knee, yet he followed THE REGIMENT in a spring waggon in rear, till upon the representation of the surgeon that if he went on with the troops he must die, he was sent back to the Hospital Station at Palencia, where, with abscess and acute rheumatism, he nearly died.

F

After "guns played incessantly," page 34.

Colonel Murray on his way to rejoin THE REGIMENT from his sick leave in England fell into the hands of the French, who allowed him after a time to continue his journey. When he arrived at Toulouse the battle had just taken place.

Colonel Murray says of the movements of the Regiment on the 17th, "the Regiment receiving the order at half-past four in the morning joined the troops at Enghien, marching all that day. Late in the afternoon of that day, Sir Hussey Vivian hearing heavy firing ordered the hay the troop-horses were carrying to be thrown down, and making all possible haste, fell in with the troops who were engaged at Quatre Bras. The action concluding as the evening set in, Colonel Murray, though it was not his turn for that duty, went on picquet."

After "movement of the cavalry," page 40.

Colonel Murray remarks, "It will be observed that under the circumstances the Regiment would have been sure of upsetting the enemy's cavalry, but these last were protected by a wood on their right, which was full of infantry and which would have neutralized any success which would have been gained. The retreat continued until a position near Waterloo was taken up. It rained heavily during the whole of that night. In the morning, as the day advanced, the weather cleared up."

After "hamlet of Hilaincourt," page 52.

"The Regiment was ordered to move forward, which it accordingly did, taking up a position on the left of the line. Their progress part of the time was over fine standing corn. Though under cannonade here, they did not suffer much casualty, and could observe the action going on in their front. After a time they were moved more to the centre, and subsequently crossed the great Brussels road, where the chaussée was completely torn up by the shot, and innumerable masses of the troops of the enemy were seen moving down. The noise was deafening, and the smoke so thick that hardly anything was to be seen. On joining the Household Brigade, Gen. Vivian asked Lord Ed. Somerset where was his Brigade? It consisted of a very few men, hardly a squadron, and of different Regiments. For some time after this the Brigade was under fire, and Gen. Vivian moved it once or twice so as to avoid its being raked with the shots, moving forward in some instances so that the shot went over the heads of the troops instead of plunging their ranks. Lord Uxbridge at this time joined Sir Hussey Vivian and rode up and down in front of the line. An order was received for the Regiment to advance; the Belgians were falling back and had to be driven forward with the flats of the swords. After remaining with great steadiness under a heavy fire, the Regiment was ordered to advance, taking a line leading diagonally to the left, as the line taken by the 10th led to the right. Some of the French Artillery moving from their right, tried to cross, and were ridden into and taken. The Regiment then attacked some of the enemy, who were posted with guns on their right. A French officer with this body rode forward and fired at the officer who was leading the Regiment, Col. Murray. After a sharp but short resistance this body of French cavalry broke, and ran passing through vast numbers of French infantry who were retreating to where there were squares of French infantry posted, when—the order for retiring having been for some time received—the Regiment fell back and joined the 10th. On their way back to the 10th the Regiment experienced very heavy casualties, many of them being knocked over at a time."

After "immediately erase it," page 56.

Speaking of the reduction of THE REGIMENT, Col. Murray says, "In Nov., 1818, the Regiment embarked at Calais and went over to England, being stationed at Newcastle, and afterwards proceeded to Newbridge, where, on a reduction of the Army, the 18th Hussars under Col. Murray and the 19th Lancers under Colonel, now Sir Henry, Wyndham, were disbanded. The Regiments were in the highest order and efficiency, and the measure was much regretted afterwards."
